

2009 Design your Study Environment, RUC, Denmark

Students from Roskilde University, RUC, engaged in designing and remaking their own “house” at Roskilde University. The Supertanker network used a fast paced 1:1 design process with cardboard and masking tape combined with a building team to get the extreme makeover done in 48 hours. The brainstorming room for example was in use for discussions already in the prototyping phase.

The students got a sense of working with design processes as a concrete way of changing their everyday space. It also gave them a good insight into the thinking of facility manager of RUC (and the like): The preferred design is a neutral and static design that nobody wanted to change.
